

COLLEGE OF ARTS, SCIENCES, AND EDUCATION

The Scholars of Practice program offers a doctoral degree in Education Leadership (EdD). The degree is designed with a public school and/or higher education emphasis to meet the demands of education leadership. Graduates of the doctoral program often pursue leadership positions in public school districts, higher education, state or federal agencies, or the private sector. The web-enhanced delivery provides flexibility for working professionals and opportunities to develop relationships with faculty, a hallmark of Texas A&M University-Texarkana. Each professor designs the most effective instructional delivery method based on course content and student need.

Applicants for the Texas A&M University-Texarkana's Scholars of Practice doctoral program must have a master's degree in Education Leadership or a related field. Prerequisites for success include: dedication to growth as a scholar, commitment to continuous learning, evidence of effective leadership, and a strong academic background.

If you have any questions about this program, contact the Office of Graduate Studies and Research at 903-223-3129, the Doctoral Program Coordinator, Dr. Kathy Lease, at klease@tamut.edu (sara.lawrence@tamut.edu), or the Education Division Chair, Dr. Rebeca Cooper rcooper@tamut.edu (sara.lawrence@tamut.edu).

- Admission Process (<http://catalog.tamut.edu/doctoral-studies/education-leadership/#text>)
- Superintendent Certification Cognate (<http://catalog.tamut.edu/graduate-studies/arts-sciences-education/education/superintendent-certification/>)
- Principal Certification Cognate (<http://catalog.tamut.edu/graduate-studies/arts-sciences-education/education/principal-certification/>)